The Grand Jury Surprised by the Revelations of Sayles and Yeatman.

W. B.:"

The advance from $200 to $500 is fair, but much too trivial for us to consider. Not a cent less than $5,000 would even tempt us. This is the riskiest work ever attempted by us and must be correspondingly profitable. Up to this time not a hair of her head has been harmed, but unless something happens soon my influence to protect her life and honor will lose its power and I will not be responsible for the results if this is kincred. One more week is given. Say by Wednesday's papers what will be done. And remember that this is a life or death game. Treachery means the certain death of Sallie Moors.

Mr. and Mrs. Cornell were astounded by the letter. They showed it to Inspector. In some mysterious manner the fact that the blackmailing letters had been received leaked out yesterday and was published in the afternoon papers. Last night Mr. Cornell decided that the premature publishing of the letters had prevented any meeting with "N. Y. B. W.," so he gave copies of them to the press. The premature publishing of the fact that the letters were received has, of course, spoiled any chance of a negotiation. If Sallie is being detained we want to find her, and rather than have anything happen to her we would give up all the money we have. Possibly some crank wrote the letters just to scare us, or it is even possible that some people are trying to force money out of us, or, in other words, that they are simply playing a bunco game and know employed to watch a row of buildings for Mr. employed to watch a row of buildings for Mr.

Mrs. Cornell is much worried over the receipt of the letters and the failure to carry out the plans laid by the detectives to find her sister.

"I believe there is foul play somewhere," said she last night, "and while these letters may be the work of a crank, still Sallie may be in captivity, or even worse. I don't think she could possibly bring herself to suicide, so there seems to be nothing else to believe except that she is being detained. A Place to Learn English. "If there was any truth in the letters we should have found Sallie had not the matter been published. The World has known about the letter since it was received, but for the sake of finding the girl nothing was printed. We jealously guarded the fact that we had received the letters. Not even the servants knew it. In fact only five persons, two of them detectives from police head-quarters, knew about them. This afternoon a raporter called here with the personal we published addressed to 'N. Y. B. W.' He asked if that did not refer to my sister. I partially acquiesced, and then he said that I had received a threatening letter demanding $5.000. To make a long story short I finally admitted that the threatening letter had been received and requested the resporter to publish authing, as we were following up the clue. He did not keep his promise and now we are as far from finding Sallie as ever."

today. Leo was charged with being an idle and incorrigible boy. His sister was the principal witness, and she charged that she had been unable to control the boy. Other witnesses gave testimony and it was stated that the boy was unable to speak or understand anything but German.

"He can go to the reform school," said the judge, "and it will be a good place for him to learn the English language."

There is consternation among the lady clerks been reached there and probably will not strain upon the floor is removed at once been reached there and probably will not be this session. So unless it is embodied in the appropriation bill the condition of attairs in this District will be lamentable. The matter of heense fees in the District has brought into the treasury of the District a large sum of money. I do not recollect the amount, but it is quite large. Unless something be done in this direction the District of Columbia will lose this revenue, and persons will have the right upon tendering the amount of the heense to seil liquor and establish livery stables where they pleased. That is the necessity for the amendment.

The amendment which is now attached to the District bill and which will probably be the only liquor legislation which the District will obtain at this session is a measure drafted by the attorney for the District, the object of which is to make the present law effective. The bill is a follows: ing was under the jurisdiction of the United States, and all inspection should be made by the architect of the treasury. The Indian Appropriation Bill.

The Indian appropriation bill, which will be reported to the House today, carries an appropriation of over $7,500,000, being no material change from that of last year.
